Written for the Democrat. FRIENDSHIP.

And brightly beams our sky, And have not to below hospicess Light up the opasiting eye-Tis not when earth seems length and fac, And Portune's gifts surround, When the glad heart with rapture, fills-

But when affliction's hour doth come, And clouded is Hope's ray, The light of Life's glad day,-Then us a sunbeam o'er the fount Where troubled waters roll, So flits its warm and cheering light Upon the care-worn soul.

A lull—the tempest lulls, and then The blast the forest scallers; The thunder peals are stilled-again The helt the turret shatters; And low the brandished hatchet sings For mightier etroke uplified: Rennd-round it awings, then down it rings, Ar I toughest blocks are rifted.

There is a solien under-hum Will swell to a tornado; A day shall come will render dumb, Cur English lords' bravado-When Irish variles hand in band, And shoulder up to chaulder. Shall take their stand on Irish land And boried fueds shall moulder.

Who chafes or faiters at delay, Faint-hearted and short-seeing? What is it all?—a winter's day, 'Mid ages of ill-being; Ah! thus our fathers were undone They cickened and seceded-Had they but battled constant on, Our battle were not needed.

God knows his times-one thing know we. Our ills, and what will end them. That these our fetters loosed must be. Or should we file or rend them? Shall we set looking at our gyves, Who talked so loud a year hence? Shall we, who frankly staked our lives, Grudge earnest perseverance?

Wa'll hoard our mite and gather more-We'll draw our brothers nigh us-We'll give our minds from wisdom's store. A firmer, manlier bias-We'll rouse the nation near and far, From Rathlin to Ivera, Then show them where the masses are
